Chapter 2: Managing and Handling Layers When you select an image and begin to work, you usually want to see the image's background layer under the other layers. Many tools enable you to paint or draw directly on the background layer. When you select a tool, you select its use on the background layer. You can also make changes to the background layer. * By using a background layer: Many of the tools in GIMP and Photoshop work best with a background layer. When you add a new layer, it becomes the background. It appears at the top of the layers dialog (the window that lists and categorizes the layers in your image) but it can be covered by a new layer. * By making changes to the background: The background layer contains changes you make to an image. You can use one or more layers over the background layer to paint or draw and hide any unwanted changes. The background layer acts as a little editing room for you to do work without disturbing the image's main areas. * **

Q: C++ I know is unreasonable, I know but: alternatives to stateful programming? I am talking about: class(struct) Client: public QObject { /* the same thing as QObject */ } that works as myClient = new Client; But If I want something like: myClient.fun1() myClient.fun2() myClient.fun3() myClient.fun4() How to do that? That is unreasonable of course, but is there a way to make it reasonably done? I would never think of returning a new stateful class because I could just return a pointer of the derived class, but this would be fine for what I want: class(struct) Client: public QObject { void fun1(); void fun2(); void fun3(); void fun4(); } // client class myClient = new Client; myClient.fun1(); myClient.fun2(); myClient.fun3(); myClient.fun4(); I guess there is no proper way to do that. Any ideas? I guess the way I do it is ok for small classes, but, if the structure of Client is already very complex, can't I group or inherit something like that? In this example, Client is just a sample and I know that I can't do that

Q: Reverse a property list I've been searching around trying to find a function to reverse a property list, which happens to be named 'list'. I found this question. I'm a beginner and don't know how to do this, I have a list of strings. I'm trying to make a function, which when given a variable, add to the variable all the strings. Here is what I have so far: 'list' Over 40% of all antibiotic prescriptions in the UK are issued as 'elective' – meaning they are not used when needed. This means that this potent antibiotic is not being used to treat a bacterial infection when it is actually needed. A report has shown that bacterial resistance can be caused because of unnecessary antibiotics being prescribed to animals. Get them off the farm now... The policy has long been ignored by farmers and their vets. This might not be the most effective way of making our food safer, however, the findings do indicate that antibiotics need to be used in a more targeted way. The W.H.O. is working on a report, which will hopefully advise on how this could be achieved. "If bacteria can't be directly targeted, should we be using antibiotics to treat livestock?" The results Just 41% of the pigs had been slaughtered within two days of the application of antibiotic
